Americans spend thousands on cameras, film and processing but skimp on preserving their precious photos for generations to come. If you want to preserve your family's unique story and precious photos, follow these product guidelines.

What to look for in your photographic preservation supplies:

- _____ "Archival quality" designation
- _____ Acid free papers, plastics, markers
- _____ "PVC free" plastics
- _____ Albums that can be expanded with refill pages
- _____ Albums that lay flat for work
- _____ Page protectors for photos & memorabilia
- _____ Archival storage containers for large & antique photos, documents, newspapers
- _____ Guaranteed local availability of refills & add-in pages
- _____ High quality cutting & cropping tools
- _____ Safe photo marking pencils
- _____ SAFE adhesive

What to avoid when preserving your precious memories:

- _____ Cheap solutions & having to search for refills that fit
- _____ Albums for which page protectors are not available
- _____ Storage in photo boxes & organizers that don't say ARCHIVAL quality
- _____ Storage that places photos in contact with papers & adhesives containing acid and lignon
- _____ Storage in "magnetic" albums & plastic pockets that will discolor photos
- _____ Storage in damp, hot or cold locations or areas with pest infestations
- _____ Inks and pens that fade or bleed
- _____ Adhesives that contain acid
- _____ Newspapers clippings & documents coming into contact with photos
- _____ Book style albums that cannot lie flat or accept additional pages
- _____ No space to journal your unique memories

Preservation products meeting all these standards are available from your local independent consultant who guarantees the quality of the products and the availability of compatible refills.
